Garry Chow is a lawyer who shifted gears from fast car as motoring journalist, to fast company as creative director, to fast mind as certified trainer and coach.

He specialise in Conflict & Emotional Management, Organisational Culture Change Management, and Negotiation Strategies & Persuasive Communication.

Having been in the communications industry for more than 18 years, he develops and customises the transformational trainings and coaching to meet clients' needs.

■ Course Overview:

Every CEOs and members of top management have to deal with many urgent and important issues without making much mistakes. Top management team like corporate directors too can – and should – play a much more active role in overseeing risk and avoiding major crises.

Despite all the rhetoric and money invested in risk prevention, risk management is too often treated as a compliance issue that can be answered by drawing up lots of rules and making sure that all employees follow them. Countless of such rules, of course, are practical and do reduce some risks that could brutally harm a company.

This experiential approach to risk prevention is specifically developed by experts and specialists to help corporate management anticipate prepare and embrace peak performance at the workplace by applying such effective techniques and strategies.
